“ MOMMY'S POEM

Mommy, from the first time you saw me, you knew you had found love
You came into my life as an angel sent from above.

As a young child I looked to you as a guide, whenever I got lost, your arms were open wide.

I know I may not have been the best son, but in your eyes I was, and you loved me unconditionally just because.

You worked so hard to give me the best life a kid could have, birthdays, Christmases, all these things just to make me laugh.

I know sometimes I would make you mad by using bad English, and by you being a great English teacher, you would stop me and correct me before I'd even finish.

Going through school, I had a slight learning disability, but you always believed in me and got me through with the best of my ability.

Staying up in the late hours of the night, you were destined to make sure that I got my work right.

Because of you I can spell almost any word, you can almost say I became a slight bit of a nerd.

You grew me up in the church, making me go every Sunday, and if I was good, you'd take me to McDonald's afterwards for a nice cold strawberry sundae.

Because of you and the values you've instilled in me, I have a good heart and have become the man you envisioned me to be.

You put me through so many things to help me try to find out what I wanted to be, but later I found martial arts, then all I wanted to do was to be your security.

Protecting you from anything bad was the only thing I cared about, and you knew I would do so without any doubt.

Eventhough you hated me fighting, telling me to please be careful as I packed my gear. You were so very proud of me when I was awarded fighter of the year.

With all of your sicknesses, my one prayer to God was to not take you until I was able to show you that I could take care of myself and that I would be ok, and now He has come to take you home, and I have to give you away.

I know you're my guardian angel, mommy I love you so. I'm so proud to be the son of Mrs. Sadye Mae Roscoe.
